Lexiles in NoveList

Click here to return to where you were...

NoveList's reading levels are determined by age, but we all know that reading abilities and interests vary widely in a specific age group. All third graders do not read at the same level.

MetaMetrics is a company based in North Carolina that developed a scientifically based measure of how hard a book is to read. This score is expressed as a number between 0 and 2000. Parents, teachers, librarians can use lexiles to find books that are reading level appropriate (see equivalency chart below).

For example, a father whose twelve-year-old son is a reluctant reader but has read Louis Sachar's book Holes and really enjoyed it could use NoveList to discover that Holes has a lexile score of 660. This father could then use the lexile limiter to only retrieve titles that are within his son's reading ability. One hundred points below and fifty points above the score of 660 would be what Lexile's creators recommend. A search on a lexile range of 560 - 710 on the topic of books with twelve-year-old boys as characters would retrieve over several potential titles for this father's son.

The Educational Levels displayed on the Lexile Map indicate approximately the middle 50% of materials found in a typical grade-level classroom (see chart to the right). For example, the instructional materials typically found in a third-grade classroom range from about 500L to 700L. You can go in many third-grade classrooms and find materials that would have measures below 500L or above 700L. We have also conducted numerous studies with large samples of students and have observed approximate reading levels (about the middle 50% of the students-the interquartile range) for each grade level (see chart below). Remember that there are still about 50% of the students that are reading higher or lower than these ranges.

You can learn more about how to equate Lexile scores to reading levels by reading MetaMetric's FAQ on the subject at <http://www.lexile.com>.
